How Shanti Act unlocks India's nuclear potential

Parliament's passage of the Sustainable Harnessing and Advancement of Nuclear Energy for Transforming India (Shanti) Act marks a structural break in India's civil nuclear governance. For the first time, private entities are truly and legally permitted to construct, own, operate, and decommission nuclear power plants in India. This reform corrects a fundamental market-design failure that had rendered nuclear power economically unbankable for over a decade. That failure was liability design.

Nuclear energy is unique among infrastructure sectors because its defining risk is not operational volatility but catastrophic tail risk, ie, low-probability, extreme-consequence events that overwhelm conventional tort-based liability systems. In such domains, markets fail unless liability is carefully channelled, capped, and backstopped by the sovereign. Without this architecture, neither insurers nor lenders can price risk, and private capital rationally stays away.

India's earlier framework under the Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage Act (CLNDA), 2010, recognised this in form but undermined it in substance. While the Act adopted a no-fault regime with strict and capped liability on the operator (aligned in principle with global norms), it introduced a fatal distortion through Section 17(b), which created a statutory right of recourse against suppliers for latent defects or substandard services. This single provision broke liability channelling. By reopening supplier exposure without clear temporal limits, evidentiary thresholds, or contractual override, it transformed a capped regime into one with unbounded contingent liability.

From the standpoint of financial economics, this made nuclear risk uninsurable. Nuclear accidents are characterised by fat-tailed distributions, deep (Knightian) uncertainty, and correlated losses across geography and time. Private insurance markets rely on diversification and pooling; nuclear risk violates both conditions. Globally, this problem is solved not by forcing private actors to internalise the impossible, but by socialising catastrophic risk through statute-backed insurance pools and sovereign guarantees. Section 17(b) short-circuited that solution by injecting unquantifiable supplier risk upstream. The result was predictable: global vendors exited, domestic suppliers hesitated, insurers retreated, and lenders demanded sovereign guarantees that negated the very purpose of private participation. The Shanti Act decisively dismantles this architecture. It repeals both the Atomic Energy Act, 1962, and the CLNDA, 2010. It also removes the statutory supplier liability clause in its entirety. Thus, the Act restores exclusive legal liability to the operator.

Supplier responsibility is now a matter of private contract, not public tort. This distinction is decisive. Ex post statutory liability is unpriceable; ex ante contractual allocation is priceable. The former kills markets; the latter enables them. In doing so, India has aligned its domestic law with established international practice under the Vienna Convention and the Convention on Supplementary Compensation (CSC), to which India is already a party. The operator liability cap, set at 300 million Special Drawing Rights (SDR), is not an arbitrary dilution of accountability but a deliberate insurance-calibrated threshold. Its purpose is to ensure that liability remains within the envelope of what insurance markets can credibly cover. Indexing or judicially expanding this cap would not enhance justice; it would destroy insurability and collapse investment.

Crucially, the Shanti Act does not stop at liability channelling. It provides for the establishment of a Nuclear Liability Fund, introducing a second layer of risk pooling beyond the operator cap. This mirrors the logic of the US Price-Anderson Act, where primary operator insurance is supplemented by industry-wide pooling and, beyond that, a federal backstop. At the international level, the CSC adds a further layer of cross-border mutualisation. These mechanisms recognise a basic economic truth. Catastrophic nuclear risk is a public bad with non-excludable spillovers. It cannot be efficiently borne by individual firms without collapsing the market. Socialising tail risk then acts towards proving an enabling infrastructure.

The financial consequences of this correction are substantial. Under the previous regime, nuclear projects faced an artificially inflated weighted average cost of capital (WACC), driven not by technology or construction risk but by legal uncertainty at the tail. Insurers priced conservatively or withdrew, suppliers embedded large risk premia into EPC contracts, and lenders insisted on sovereign guarantees. The outcome was not higher tariffs but project non-viability. Shanti collapses this risk premium by converting nuclear power from an uninsurable legal anomaly into a financeable infrastructure asset.

predicted widespread calamities, societal breakdown, and intense suffering, emphasizing that only those living by truth (Dharma) would find refuge and peace. Sant Mavji Maharaj's message is relevant to today's world. Let's dive deeper into what this means in the present context.

The widespread calamities, he spoke seem to be unfolding before our eyes. Climate change is causing devastating natural disasters, and pandemics are sweeping across the globe, disrupting lives and economies. Earthquakes, tsunamis, and other extreme weather events are becoming more frequent, leaving communities in ruins. Mavji Maharaj's prediction about calamities is a stark reminder of the impermanence of life and the importance of being prepared for the unexpected.

The societal breakdown he predicted is also evident in today's world. Social media has created a sense of connection, but it's also fuelled division, hatred, and moral decay. We're seeing increased polarization, racism, and social unrest, leaving many feeling lost and disconnected. The breakdown of traditional values and institutions has created a sense of chaos and disorder, making it challenging for people to find their place in society. The intense suffering Mavji Maharaj spoke of is palpable in today's world. Mental health issues are on the rise, and economic instability is causing anxiety and stress. Conflict and violence are still prevalent, and many are struggling to make ends meet. His prediction highlights the distress many are feeling, and it's a call to action to address these issues. However, Mavji Maharaj's message isn't all doom and gloom. He emphasized that those who adhere to truth, righteousness, and moral principles (Dharma) will find peace and refuge. In today's world, this means embracing honesty and integrity, practicing empathy and compassion, standing up for justice and what's right, and nurturing a sense of community and connection. By living by these principles, we can create a sense of inner peace and calm, even in the midst of chaos. Applying Dharma in daily life is about embracing a way of living that promotes harmony and balance. It's about cultivating mindfulness, compassion, and integrity in your thoughts, words, and actions. You can start by being more present in your interactions with others, speaking truthfully, and being kind to all living beings. Taking care of the environment and living sustainably is also a key part of Dharma. By prioritizing self-care and engaging in acts of kindness, you can create a sense of inner peace and calm, even in chaotic times. Dharma is about living in accordance with natural laws and principles, so it's not about following rules, but about embracing a way of being that promotes the well-being of all.

Mavji Maharaj's message is a reminder that we're not just passive observers of the world's chaos; we have the power to create positive change. By focusing on Dharma and living by truth, we can build resilience, foster compassion, and create a more just and peaceful world. His prediction is a wake-up call to take responsibility for our actions and to strive for a higher purpose. In essence, Sant Mavji Maharaj's message is a call to action viz to focus on Dharma, and one can find peace amidst chaos. It's a reminder that truth, compassion, and righteousness are the keys to navigating the challenges of today's world and finding refuge in the midst of uncertainty.
